Antifa Is the Natural Product of Our Educational System

By Roger L. Simon

Antifa is flourishing here in the U.S. as never before.

The Antifa movement's stated goal – anarchy – would create chaos, leading to a civilizational destruction of a likely unparalleled extent in our industrialized and high-tech nation of almost 330 million.

The deepest causes of their violent and more than slightly deranged behavior are undoubtedly personal and psychoanalytic in nature, but almost all of the Antifa members share one thing in common:

They went to American schools.

And those schools, with only a few notable exceptions, talked down and continue to talk down the United States of America to one degree or another from kindergarten through doctorate.

For decades our schools have been self-duplicating machines, preaching to college students, directly or indirectly, the left-wing gospel according to Howard Zinn (and the [neo-Marxist] Frankfurt School and so forth) and sending them out to preach this junior varsity, critical theory Marxism as teachers at whatever level at all manner of institutions throughout the country.

Antifa members are only doing what they have been taught all along, getting rid of the cancer called the United States.

Antifa doesn't have a formal leadership structure. They also don't keep records. Whether Antifa is 50 percent teachers or 20 percent teachers, it's a lot of teachers.

Almost all our schools have their tentacles buried deeply into the supposed social justice causes espoused more militantly in the streets by Antifa, which is an excruciating public manifestation of a very deep infection that has metastasized throughout our society from the schools.

It will only get worse unless we change our educational system – pronto.

What kind of education is it when 95 percent of college professors vote Democratic, and mostly left-wing Democratic at that?

Viewpoint diversity, anyone? Shall I home school my child? Shall I send him or her to college so they can come back in an Antifa T-shirt and accuse me of being a capitalist pig when I just spent 50 grand for their tuition?

Something is wrong with this picture.

Roger L. Simon is co-founder of PJ Media. He also is a graduate of two Ivy League institutions to which he no longer donates – not that they need the money.

Judges acquit Dutch populist Wilders of inciting discrimination

AMSTERDAM (Reuters) - A Dutch court on Friday acquitted Dutch far-right populist Geert Wilders of inciting discrimination, although it said he had intentionally insulted Moroccans as a group.

The appeals panel also dismissed allegations that Wilders had committed the separate offense of inciting hatred. It rejected a prosecution request that Wilders pay a fine of 5,000 euros ($5,900).

Wilders, who has lived under constant police protection for more than a decade due to [Islamist] death threats, has "already paid a high price for years for expressing his opinion", the presiding judge said.

The trial of Wilders, one of Europe's most prominent far-right leaders, has been seen as pitting the rights of freedom of speech against the right of ethnic and religious minorities not to suffer verbal abuse and discrimination.

Wilders, 56, whose Freedom Party has at times topped national opinion polls, had argued he did nothing wrong, and merely expressed openly what many Dutch people think.

He had been convicted in 2016 of inciting discrimination at a campaign rally in 2014, when he led supporters in asking whether they wanted more or fewer Moroccans in the country.

"Fewer! Fewer! Fewer!" his supporters chanted. "We're going to take care of that," Wilders said, smiling.

The judges said Wilders had planned the remarks ahead of time, knowing they would be inflammatory and insulting to the 400,000 people of Moroccan ancestry in the Netherlands. – Sept. 3, 2020

Facebook names members of content oversight board

The Facebook Oversight Board — a 20-member independent panel that will rule on which posts can be blocked as false or as hate speech or harassment — is a recipe for left-wing censorship.

Sure, there are a few token conservatives, such as Stanford Law prof Michael McConnell. But even he is potentially compromised, since his firm represents much of the Silicon Valley corporate elite.

The majority are clearly prone to view truth through a left-wing lens. Alan Rusbridger, for example, won fame in his days as editor-in-chief of the lefty UK paper The Guardian. He's a massive fan of silencing dissent from the right of the spectrum.

Wired reports that insiders said getting liberals for the board was fairly easy "since human rights activists generally shade liberal" — revealing a horrific blindness about the difference between activism and a genuine commitment to free speech.

The real purpose of the board is to get Mark Zuckerberg and other Facebook execs out of the no-win position of being responsible for what speech they ban. It outsources censorship. The panel will initially only take up appeals of Facebook's decisions to block content, but is eventually supposed to start deleting on its own.

At The Post, we know Facebook makes mistakes: It took us weeks to get the company to reverse its blockage of Steven Mosher's opinion column suggesting that the coronavirus might have escaped from that Wuhan lab. It's an official government investigation now, but back then Facebook determined it wasn't a topic you were allowed to discuss.

We have less confidence that this "court" will make fairer decisions or be anything more than thought police. — NY Post oped May 7, 2020

Dems Go All In on Gun Control at Convention

Democrats went full throttle on gun control at the DNC Convention on Wednesday night and they put their support behind a renewal of the Assault Weapons Ban.

"I want a president who cares about our pain and grief, a president who will take on the gun lobby to ban assault weapons and close the loopholes to keep guns out of the hands of criminals," Moms Demand Action volunteer Deandra Dycus said. "Joe Biden has taken on the NRA twice and won. And he will do it again as president."

Biden supported the Assault Weapons Ban of 1994 but his new 'anti-gun project' includes either a mandatory buy-back, you turn it in voluntarily, or it will be regulated like explosives.

His VP pick, Kamal Harris went even further during her failed primary campaign by supporting the outright confiscation of assault weapons. She advocated for a mandatory buyback of what she estimated to be up to 10 million legally owned firearms.

"I support a mandatory gun buyback program," she said during an October policy forum hosted by the gun-control group March for Our Lives. "We're going to have to have smart public policy that's about taking those off the streets but doing it the right way."

The November election will quite literally decide the future of gun ownership in America.

The Sleeping Masses Are Waking Up! Here's How to Speed the Process

Talk-Show host Tim Ray previews his upcoming presentation at Red Pill Expo on Jekyll Island, Georgia, October 10-11. He will describe the best methods for motivating the sleeping masses to take the red pill and awaken from their illusions. This process already has begun but it must be rapidly accelerated if we are to stop the growth of tyranny before it becomes too powerful to overcome. — G. Edward Griffin 2020 September 11

Pasco's sheriff monitors and harasses families across the county

Pasco County Sheriff Chris Nocco took office in 2011 with a bold plan: to create a cutting-edge intelligence program that could stop crime before it happened.

What he actually built was a system to continuously monitor and harass Pasco County residents, a Tampa Bay Times investigation has found.

First the Sheriff's Office generates lists of people it considers likely to break the law, based on arrest histories, unspecified intelligence and arbitrary decisions by police analysts.

Then it sends deputies to find and interrogate anyone whose name appears, often without probable cause, a search warrant or evidence of a specific crime.

They swarm homes in the middle of the night, waking families and embarrassing people in front of their neighbors. They write tickets for missing mailbox numbers and overgrown grass, saddling residents with court dates and fines. They come again and again, making arrests for any reason they can.

One former deputy described the directive like this: "Make their lives miserable until they move or sue."

In just five years, Nocco's signature program has ensnared almost 1,000 people.

At least 1 in 10 were younger than 18.

Some of the young people were labeled targets despite having only one or two arrests.

Rio Wojtecki, 15, became a target in September 2019, almost a year after he was arrested for stealing motorized bicycles.

He already had a juvenile probation officer checking on him. Yet from September 2019 to January 2020, Pasco Sheriff's deputies went to his home at least 21.

More than once, the deputies acknowledged that Rio wasn't getting into trouble. But he had been identified as a target, they said, so they had to keep checking on him.

Since September 2015, the Sheriff's Office has sent deputies on checks like those more than 12,500 times.

Deputies gave the mother of one teenage target a $2,500 fine because she had five chickens in her backyard.

As they make checks, deputies feed information back into the system, not just on the people they target, but on family members, friends and anyone else in the target's orbit.

Last summer, the Sheriff's Office announced plans to begin keeping tabs on people who have been repeatedly committed to psychiatric hospitals.

The Times shared its findings with the Sheriff's Office six weeks before this story published. Nocco declined multiple interview request.

The Sheriff's Office provided statistics showing a decline in burglaries, larcenies and auto thefts since the program began in 2011.

But Pasco's drop in property crimes was similar to the decline in the seven-largest nearby police jurisdictions. Over the same time period, violent crime increased only in Pasco.

Criminal justice experts compared the tactics to child abuse, mafia harassment and surveillance that could be expected under an authoritarian regime.

"One of the worst manifestations of the intersection of junk science and bad policing — and an absolute absence of common sense and humanity — that I have seen in my career," said David Kennedy, a renowned criminologist at the John Jay College of Criminal Justice, whose research on crime prevention is referenced in Pasco's policies.

Chinese Are Corrupting the College Board

In NAS's latest report, Corrupting the College Board: Confucius Institutes and K-12 Education, Rachelle Peterson continues her celebrated work on Chinese influence on American education through an in-depth examination of this dangerous partnership.

Peterson details how the College Board, an organization ostensibly dedicated to the betterment of American students and thereby America as a whole, has partnered with the Chinese Communist Party in many facets of its operations, including the development of the AP Chinese Language and Culture course and exam; the furtherance of Confucius Institutes and Confucius Classrooms in American schools; the establishment of the "Chinese Bridge Delegation Program"; and the organization of the National Chinese Language Conference.

Indeed, College Board CEO David Coleman has said, "Hanban [the Chinese Communist Party education agency] is just like the sun. It lights the path to develop Chinese teaching in the U.S. The College Board is the moon. I am so honored to reflect the light that we've gotten from Hanban." If by "lighting the path" Coleman means denying that the Tiananmen Square Massacre actually happened and treating Tibet and Taiwan as undisputed Chinese territory, then he's right on the money.

China's pervasive efforts to undermine and influence American higher education must be exposed and brought to an end immediately. The NAS calls on the College Board to cut all ties with the Chinese Communist Party and to develop a new Chinese language and culture class that does not bend the knee to CCP propaganda and intimidation.

Feds entrap 2 'Boogaloo Bois' in plot to 'arm Hamas', topple statues, attack white supremacists, politicians and police

By Chris Menahan

The FBI and the DOJ entrapped two low-IQ "Boogaloo Bois" in a cockamamie scheme to send arms to Hamas, attack monuments and attack white supremacists, politicians, police and the media.

This is the exact same scheme the government used to regularly carry out with Muslims as the target to advance the neocon agenda in the Middle East but now it's being done to further the narrative "white supremacists" are secretly behind the violence at all the hundreds of Black Lives Matter riots throughout the country.

From CBS News (Sept. 5), "2 members of far-right group Boogaloo Bois charged with attempting to support Hamas":

"Michael Solomon and Benjamin Teeter [who are white] proclaim themselves to be members of the Boogaloo Bois, a group that espouses a violent ideology and an objective to overthrow the government. The defendants believed their anti-U.S. government views aligned with those of Hamas, a foreign terrorist organization, and actively developed plans to carry out violence in Minnesota and elsewhere," U.S. Attorney Erica H. MacDonald said in a statement.

According to the Justice Department, Solomon and Teeter were part of a subgroup of the Boogaloo Bois known as the Bojahideen that wants to overthrow the government and replace the police. The pair were charged under a new task force created in June by Attorney General William Barr to deal with anti-government extremism.

The FBI received information in early June about Solomon, Teeter and other members of the Boogaloo Bois and Bojahideen through a confidential source who the defendants believed was a member of Hamas, the complaint said. Solomon and Teeter allegedly offered themselves as "mercenaries" to generate cash and other funding for Hamas.

According to the complaint, Solomon and Teeter told the source and another individual they believed to be a member of Hamas, but who was really an FBI agent, about their alleged idea of destroying government monuments, raiding the headquarters of a White supremacist organization in North Carolina and targeting politicians and the media.

On Saturday, Hamas stressed they had no link to the Boogaloo Bois and accused the U.S. government of trying to discredit the government.

UPDATE: Newsweek is reporting (Sept. 5) Teeter was a self-described "left anarchist," not "far-right" as the media has reported.

In an interview with CNN in June, Teeter described how he made the trip to Minneapolis from North Carolina with the aim of protecting protesters from police abuse and white supremacists during unrest in the wake of the killing of George Floyd.

Teeter said he was a non-voting "left anarchist" and a member of the LGBT community, adding, "people think I'm part of a Nazi group—I'm not."

"If people are going to initiate deadly force against us, we need to be willing and able to initiate deadly force in return," he said. --

Empty Shelves: Ammunition Sales Surge 139%

By AWR Hawkins

National Shooting Sports Foundation (NSSF) indicates that ammunition sales were up 139 percent in the first six months 2020 as compared to sales during the first six months of 2019.

NSSF CEO Joe Bartozzi speaking at the 2020 Gun Rights Policy Conference over the weekend also said that gun sales were 95 percent higher in the first six months of 2020 than they were during the same time period in 2019.

Bartozzi noted there were nearly five million first-time gun buyers in the first part of the year. He explained that "of all firearms sold to first-time gun buyers, 40 percent were sold to women and personal protection was by far the main purchase driver."

He suggested the driving factors behind the current surge in gun and ammo sales — one of the key ones being the anti-gun rhetoric of Joe Biden. He suggested Biden looks at gun makers as "the enemy" and recounted Biden's vow "to bring them down." He observed that the talk of "mandatory buybacks" of certain firearms is a driving force as well.

Bartozzi also listed the fear arising from a "scarcity of goods and services" caused by the pandemic and the fear "concerning a lack of police involvement and protection" as driving forces behind the surge in gun and ammo sales.

On February 24, 2020, Breitbart News reported that Biden referenced gun manufacturers during a speech in South Carolina, and he said, "I'm going to take you down."

Biden and his running mate Kamala Harris both support extreme gun controls, among which is an "assault weapon" ban and government-mandated buybacks of certain firearms.

Another Anti-Gun Myth Destroyed by Reality

By Cam Edwards

Back in 2013, Kansas approved a bill that would allow legal concealed carry holders to carry on college campuses, but delayed enactment of the law until 2017. Naturally, anti-gun activists and academics warned that scenes from the Wild West would soon be playing out as drunken frat boys engaged in shootouts, disgruntled students would pull guns on their professors, and accidental shootings would become a new regular feature in the student union.

Some professors retired or relocated rather than teach on a campus where firearms might be present, like these educators at KSU.

Philip Nel, a distinguished professor in English, said he is taking a leave of absence to look for a new job or fellowships, he said. "I would like to continue to do my job, rather than in a place that is weaponized and unsafe," he said.

Ruth Miller, a K-State electrical and computer engineering professor decided to move to Pennsylvania this summer before the law goes into effect.

It's been three years now since the law took effect, and campus carry hasn't turned Kansas into the Wild West. In fact, as the Kansas State Collegian reports:

The allowance for concealed carry of handguns at Kansas State and other Kansas Board of Regents schools began on July 1, 2017.

In accordance with state law, KBOR approved this new weapons policy, and since then, there have been no direct incidents on campus involving a concealed carrier...

"Kansas State University police have no reports of policy violations or open carry incidents on campus last year," Bradli Millington, lieutenant with the K-State Police Department, said in an email.

According to gun control activists, we were supposed to see the streets of Manhattan, Kansas look like a scene out of Mad Max. Instead, students and faculty who are legally carrying concealed on campus haven't created any problems at all.

Do you think the professors who fled the state over the supposed dangerousness of the state's campus carry law have any regrets? Do they wish, perhaps, that they had applied some of the critical thinking skills that they're supposed to be teaching to students to their own situation?

Instead they bought into the lies and fear-mongering of gun control groups. They decided they simply couldn't trust their colleagues or their students, so they ran away.

The anti-gun hype over Kansas' campus carry law turns out to have been much ado about nothing. Nothing, that is, except objecting to Americans exercising their constitutional rights.--

UN Condemns Use of 'Automatic Rifle' in Kenosha, Calls for Stricter Gun Control

Rupert Colville, the spokesperson for the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights spoke out last Friday about the growing civil unrest in America.

Specifically, Colville addressed the Kyle Rittenhouse incident and the officer-involved shooting of Jacob Blake in Kenosha, Wisconsin.

The UN spokesman indicated that violence in America is a "long-running problem" that needs to be tackled via tougher gun laws (emphasis added below).

"We would see this as yet another unfortunate example of insufficient and lacks [sic] gun control measures in the United States, which is something we have spoken about several times before," he said. "It should be inconceivable that you have a 17-year-old running around with an automatic rifle."

Rittenhouse, the 17-year-old he was referring to, shot three individuals during last week's riots in Kenosha and killed two of them. Lawyers for the teen, who has since been charged with murder, argue that he was acting in self-defense when he successfully repelled the attackers with an AR-15 — a semiautomatic rifle.

All of the men Rittenhouse shot were convicted criminals. Joseph "JoJo" Rosenbaum, 36, was a convicted pedophile, Anthony Huber, 26, was a convicted domestic abuser, and Gaije Grosskreutz, 26, is a convicted felon who faced charges for burglary, criminal trespass, theft, and disorderly conduct.

Rosenbaum and Huber did not survive their wounds. Grosskreutz, who appeared to have pulled out a handgun and pointed it at Rittenhouse during the melee, is expected to survive. It's not clear yet if he has been charged for assaulting Rittenhouse or for unlawfully possessing a firearm as a prohibited person.

A judge and jury will ultimately decide the fate of Mr. Rittenhouse. However, from the video evidence available online and the reports from local media, it appears to be a justifiable use of force under Wisconsin law.

Yet, Colville does not view the case as a teen allegedly protecting himself from a violent and unruly mob of convicted felons, rather he sees it as a criminal act that underscores a lack of progress on gun violence prevention because "guns are so readily available and especially assault rifles." — guns.america.com September 2, 2020

Four Lessons from Kenosha: A legal look at the Kyle Rittenhouse case

By now we have all seen the videos from Kenosha Wisconsin of riots (or "mostly peaceful protests") depending on which news network you watch. We have Kyle Rittenhouse give multiple interviews throughout the evening indicating that he was there to help out by "defending property." Before we get into lessons learned, I need to point out that I am not a Wisconsin attorney. Because of this, I cannot specifically address how property can be defended in Wisconsin, how deadly force justification works in Wisconsin, or whether a 17 year old may lawfully open carry a weapon. However, there are still some major takeaways.

Lesson One: Don't Talk Too Much: When you openly admit that you were there to protect property, you should expect prosecutors to look at you skeptically. Where you are defending other people's property rather than your own, the prosecution will look at you even more dubiously. Remember, in Virginia, you cannot even brandish a firearm solely in defense of property.

Lesson Two: Everything Is Filmed: Expect any action you take to be caught on cameras. Security cameras, ring doorbells, dash cams, and cell phone videos all could potentially be used against you. I remind people all the time not to conduct themselves in any way that they would not want to see broadcast on the nightly news. Of course, cameras and video can help you if it supports your case.

Lesson Three: A Gun May Not Scare People Away: The video of Kyle running from a group of 15-25 people who are chasing him should destroy this notion. The protesters didn't run from him, they turned on him and chased him, and they attacked him with weapons they had with them, with their fists, and with weapons of opportunity, such as skateboards. Kyle's open carrying did not dissuade the protesters from engaging him, but rather drew attention to himself.

Lesson Four: Expect To Be Charged: This is a tough lesson for someone in Kyle's age group to deal with. Even if the evidence were entirely in Kyle's favor, you need to expect to be arrested after an incident such as this. In part it is simply the political climate at work. Do I suspect that murder charges against Kyle will stick? I do not. Would I want to be 17 years old, sitting in a jail cell, and wondering how my future will turn out? I absolutely would not. This is why I preach avoidance. If you can avoid ugly situations, or avoid problems, then you can avoid getting into a long and drawn out, expensive, and stressful legal proceeding to establish your innocence.

For immediate release: Department Of Justice Identifies New York City,
Portland And Seattle As Jurisdictions
Permitting Violence And Destruction Of Property

The U.S. Department of Justice today identified the following jurisdictions that have permitted violence and destruction of property to persist and have refused to undertake reasonable measures to counteract criminal activities: New York City, Portland and Seattle.

The list was made in response to President Trump's memorandum of September 2, 2020, entitled "Memorandum on Reviewing Funding to State and Local Government Recipients That Are Permitting Anarchy, Violence, and Destruction in American Cities."

"When state and local leaders impede their own law enforcement officers and agencies from doing their jobs, it endangers innocent citizens who deserve to be protected, including those who are trying to peacefully assemble and protest," said Attorney General William P. Barr. "We cannot allow federal tax dollars to be wasted when the safety of the citizenry hangs in the balance."

New York City

For July 2020, shootings increased from 88 to 244, an increase of 177% over July 2019. In August 2020, shootings increased from 91 to 242, a 166% increase over August 2019.

The Manhattan and Brooklyn DAs have declined to prosecute charges of disorderly conduct and unlawful assembly arising from the protests, and the DAs in Queens and the Bronx have declined to prosecute other protest-related charges.

Mayor de Blasio and Governor Cuomo have forcefully rejected federal law enforcement support.

Portland, Oregon

This month, Portland marked 100 consecutive nights of protests marred by vandalism, chaos, and even killing. In August, Portland Mayor Wheeler sent a letter to President Trump expressly rejecting the Administration's offer of federal law enforcement to stop the violent protests.

Seattle, Washington

For nearly a month the City of Seattle permitted anarchists and activists to seize six square blocks of the city's Capitol Hill neighborhood, naming their new enclave the "Capitol Hill Occupied Protest" (CHOP). Law enforcement and fire fighters were precluded from entering the territory and the Seattle Police Department was ordered to abandon their precinct.

Person-related crime in the CHOP increased 525% from the same period of time in the same area the year before. Two teenagers were killed in the zone.

The Seattle City Council, Mayor Durkan, and Governor Jay Inslee publicly rejected federal involvement in law enforcement activities within the city of Seattle.-- Press Release Number: 20-966, September 21, 2020

Twitter's Jack Dorsey helped donate $11 million to organisations that included the Bail Project, linked to the U-Haul in Louisville earlier today

By Jack Hadfield

National File reported today that an employee of the Bail Project, Holly Zoller, was caught handing out shields and other equipment to potential rioters from a U-Haul truck in Louisville, Kentucky.

The organisation that Zoller works for, the Bail Project, opposes cash bail, and claims that paying bail for those in jail is an "act of resistance against a system that criminalizes race and poverty."

The Bail Project has been funded by the CEO of Twitter, Jack Dorsey. In June, Dorsey's #startsmall initiative teamed up with Rihanna's Clara Lionel Foundation, to donate $11 million to organisations that "advance racial equity, with a focus on criminal justice and policing reform."

National File also noted that the Bail Project has ties to George Soros, the founder of the Open Society Foundation. At least two employees of the Bail Project are or were "Soros Justice Fellows." According to the Open Society Foundation's website, "the Soros Justice Fellowships fund outstanding individuals to catalyze change on a range of issues facing the U.S. criminal justice system."
